Save Strathcona Park!

first hearings. A second stage of the same project, at the same damsite, will raise the lake level by another 45 feet, to elevation 725 feet, which is some 15 feet above normal high water and some five or six feet above extreme high water at

Buttle lake. Let me repeat that there is no possible objection to the first stage of the project. And there can be real advantage to the recreational value of the area, as well as to the hydro-electric resource, if the lake is raised to elevation 710 feet or even a little higher.

This will make one big lake, more than 35 miles long and heading in the untouched reaches of Strathcona Park. With proper clearing and sensible attention to other details, the new lakeshore at Upper Campbell can become reasonably attractive; the fishing should be improved; and there will be water access to an enormous range of country. At elevation 710 feet the new lake could become one of the finest recreational attractions on the continent, certainly the most Important on Vancouver is-

Value Lost

Much of this value will be lost if the water is raised high enough to drown the standing timber along Buttle lake or to necessitate clear-

Exactly where such difficulties begin to arise no one knows, for the simple reason that no one has been ordered to find out. It may well be that timber and brush along the lake edge could stand temporary flooding to a little beyond elevation 710' - perhaps to within ten or twelve feet of the commission's proposed level. This last few feet of water Is not storage needed for the main, high head plant of the John Hart development, It simply reflects dead storage, simed at producing a slightly higher seasonal head at the amall plant to be established below Upper Campbell lakea plant which the commission engineers called "uneconomic at the original hearlngs. It is quite obvious that a supplementary steam plant could take care of seasonal fluctuations and entirely do away with the need for this dead storage.

However that may be, the point remains that the damage done to the park will be done, if it is done, for a very minor amount of storage. perhaps no more than ten feet. And no one has taken the trouble to find out exactly what this figure is; no effort has been made to arrange a compromise that will realise two assets instead of Navy Day brought more than 10,000 visitors to Esquimalt yesterday. They thronged the wharves to inspect ships of the Pacific Coast Fleet, and waited in long line-ups to board the visiting British cruiser HMS Superb, seen here gaily dressed in bunting, which leaves at 9.30 a.m. today for Santa Barbara, Calif. meeting" to demand that the speed limit on a stretch of the new highway be reduced from 50 to 30 miles an hour before school reopens.

They "muttered with anger" when a letter was read from Evan Jones, deputy highways minister, turning down ar earlier plea for a reduced speed limit. They'll mutter at me for this, but I must say I'm inclined to sympathize with Mr. Jones rather

The fact that there have been one or two bad accidents on the new highway is not in itself a reason to berate the highway department and angrily demand various restrictions.

There are accidents on the best-regulated roads. Accidents even happen when cars are at a standstill, and careless people tumble through a window and land on their heads. There will be other accidents on the new highway, regardless of speed limit, and some of the accidents will be the fault of dreamy pedestrians who walk without looking.

I'm inclined to think that children are coddled and fussed over a little too much, both on the streets and in other departments of modern life. I would like to see less energy spent forcing people to defer to children and more energy spent in teaching children to look out for themselves. Ours is becoming a child-centred society. We'll have children on the school board next, demanding 10-mile-an-hour zones everywhere, plus the right to commandeer any passing car when they are too lazy to walk.

As another writer pointed out, you can't eliminate all hazards. You may cut down a laburnum tree so that the children won't eat the poisonous seeds, but you can't rip up all the railway tracks for fear a child will be struck by a train. You can't have cliffs and whirlpools abolished by order-in-

And it is debatable whether a new fast highway should be festooned with traffic lights and clogged with slow zones until it becomes just another street. I am in favor of keeping most children and quite a few adults alive, but I think they should be taught to do their part to stay with us in this world, rather than demand protection from every risk.

Having got those sentiments off my chest, I must add the highway department doesn't appear to be 100 per cent right in this argument. Did you ever hear of an argument where one of the parties was 100 per cent right?

* * *

Surely the highway engineers should have built two or three underpasses at various points to carry both pedestrians and vehicles across the highway. They would cost a great deal more to build now than been installed at first, but couldn't they still be built all the same?

If a proper survey of vehicle and pedestrian traffic-regardless of angry mutters from the sidelines-shows that underpasses would meet a need, couldn't the highway department backtrack and build them now?

With a curious perversity, the school board is preparing to build a new school bang up against the highway. Also, large housing estates now in the planning stage will disgorge hundreds of cars on the

A whole new group of parents will soon be holding heated meetings and angrily muttering their demands for cross-walks and speed limits, until the highway is strung from end to end with traffic lights, like a Christmas tree, and striped with more white lines than a football gridiron.

Renewing British Railways

comment frequently on the rundown condition of British railways, of the shabby coaches and poor service, and generally attribute this to nationalization. The latter does nothing to provide a desirable incentive but the root cause of the current railway disrepair is a direct legacy. of the last war. In fact the system worked too well during those days for its own good, according to a member of the British transport commission. The railways accomplished prodigious feats of mass wartime transportation and had they broken down altogether money, materials and labor would have been turned to their rescue. Because they emerged battered and torn but still alive and functioning they were relegated to the end of the rehabilitation queue.

The essential British post-war aim was restoration of the export trade and the railways had to wait while materials and manpower were channelled mainly to industries catering for the export market. Except in a limited way the railways were unable to replenish damaged or out-

CANADIAN visitors to Great Britain moded rolling stock or to provide services that were crying out for attention. Many coaches for instance which should have been renewed years ago are still running on some lines. Travellers from other more fortunate nations have probably not quite appreciated the difficulties of British railways in the immediate post-war

> A large-scale program of rehabilitation is now to be set in motion, however, costing no less than $3,300,000,000 - about two-thirds the amount of the whole Canadian budget-and spread over a period of 15 years. This huge undertaking includes the substitution of electric and diesel traction for steam, designed to produce cleaner trains, cleaner stations and in fact cleaner towns. The program is in effect a renewal of the whole railway system, and if unhampered by the evils of nationalization the result will be a complete transformation of the railways scene. Coming at this later date also it is likely to be more modern in every respect than had such works been possible immediately following the war.

Profits in Rubbish

WITH the progress industrial science accumulated tailings of the old smelter is making in finding profitable uses for all kinds of rubbish, one hesitates to throw anything away. Hold onto a pile of trash long enough and the scientists will discover ways of turning it into money. Who would have thought, for example, that there was good profit to be made out of a slag heap? Yet the miniature mountain of slag that has stood as an ugly landmark on the Crofton waterfront for nearly half a century is now producing good returns for its owners.

Slag piles hitherto have always been a nuisance to mine and smelter operators. Disregarding the Irishman's solution-dig a hole and bury it-there was nothing to be done with slag except pile it up in mounds to stand as an arid eyesore, since nothing will grow in it.

The pile at Crofton represents the turning them into beefsteaks.

that was fed from the Mount Sicker copper mine, closed down a generation or more No practical use or way of getting rid of it could be found until someone discovered that the hard, crystalline particles were ideal for sandblasting, which is the modern method of cleaning the bottoms of ships and other rusty or soaled metal surfaces. So now the once useless Crofton slag is being shipped out by hundreds of tons, some of it going as far away as California.

In many other industries, such as lumbering and petroleum refining, what formerly were treated as useless leavings or by-products now yield enormous profits. It's getting to the point where one is afraid to throw away an old pair of shoes in case someone comes up with a process for

Need for Precaution

WITH channel swimming at the height of a rage that reaches all the way from Juan de Fuca to Dover Strait, including other waterways en route, it is not surprising that youngsters should be fired to emulate the deeds of their elders. Local enthusiasm in this respect is reflected in the 48 boys and girls who have entered for the two-mile Labor Day. swim from Elk Lake to Beaver Lake.

Forty-eight swimmers are a lot. When all these boys and girls are in the water together they will comprise a substantial flotilla, and with each competitor accompanied by a boat there may not be much room for manoeuvre. Swimmers don't swim between white lines like foot runners on a track. Especially in the channel between the two lakes is the congestion likely to be thick. Considerable care will have to be taken to prevent any untoward happening

Two miles also constitutes a fairly lengthy swim, particularly when the contestants are 16 years and under. Youthful enthusiasm may induce some youngsters to bid for something that is beyond their strength. Even in the case of adult channel swimmers there are instances of unwise participation. All in all every precaution will have to be taken to safeguard each and every entry in this mass juvenile Labor Day swim. A considerable responsibility rests on all those who will supervise the event.

Which Is It To Be?

DIFFICULTIES are building up rapidly areas. On top of this there is a private for the provincial government in connection with Victoria's new main highway outlet. Residents of Saanich areas close to or bordering the arterial highway, understandably anxious about the safety of children at intersections, are now demanding a speed limit of 30 miles an hour-the same as in densely populated project afoot to subdivide large tracts of land alongside the highway into hundreds of home sites.

These are matters to which earnest consideration will have to be given in relation to the question: is this longawaited and urgently needed artery to be an express highway or just another local

Interpreting the News

Britain Leads Atomic Race

By J. M. ROBERTS Associated Press News Analyst

PRESIDENT Elsenhower's suggestion that another world conference should be held in two years is an indication of the speed with which general use of atomic power is approaching.

Indeed, revelations at Geneva suggest that, for some coal-short countries, atomic power plants are just around the corner.

Already the costs of reactors are coming down, from the millions to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Already there are several different types, using fissionable materials in different ways. Scientists are already at work on harnessing of the power of the hydrogen

The most concrete program is being worked out in Britain, where the coal reserve that made the little island an economic giant is beginning to run short and is increasingly uneconomical to work. The British government already has announced plans for 18 atomic plants to meet her increasing power needs.

For most of the world, however, the political and economic impacts of alomic power stirthe imagination more than the practical scien-

The British program, for instance, is designed to bolster her position as processor of a large share of the world's raw materials. But will she be able to get those raw materials when the producing countries themselves become processors through the use of the new

It is hard to think of any development in modern times which promises to contribute so much to the independence of small states.

What about Russia, which from a standing start 50 years ago has been rapidly overtaking the world's greatest industrial powers? Russia has coal, but the development of her vast raw material supplies is really just beginning.

The atomic poser comes at a time when she is in a position to leap-frog much of the industrialization process through which most of the Western world has passed. Will she be able to gear her expansion to the new power, thus leaving many of her competitors tied to obsolete plants ?

The mere fact that science is moving so fast leads to a whole field of speculations such

do. The French are more volatile in all their ways; you can't imagine them making a dirge out of any anthem, even someone else's.

Their own hymn of course was and still is calculated to rouse the spirit. The "Marseillaise" was a battle-cry, forged in times of national stress. As a matter of fact, so was "God Save the King (or Queen)," although you'd never think so the way we sing it. It wasn't fashioned in the quiet of some composer's ivery tower either.

Actually there was stern business afoot. The Young Pretender was sweeping into England, maybe to be victorious, when a group of actors at Drury Lane stepped suddenly forward to introduce a patriotic song: "God Save Our Noble King."

* * *

The effect was electrical; audience ferror nearly raised the roof.

So the genesis of our anthem is akin to that of the "Marseillaise." It has double emphasis, for the Georgians simply rewrote a song born in similar circumstances and made it a boomerang. 'God Save the King" had originally been invoked to save the Young Pretender's grandfather from his enemies.

We have two anthems, of course, and we are apt to sing them both like dirges. "O Canada" isn't exactly a battle cry but it also should call forthenough national pride to make the spirit tingle as Mr. Philpott's did when the French army band uplifted Having two anthems admittedly does cause a little confusion. One touches the throne the other the land, and if one or the other is omitted someone is offended.

A year or two ago parliament debated a proposal that "() Canada" should be designated as THE national anthem, but so long as we are a monarchy I don't see how this suggestion can be reconciled. A queen can scarcely be separated from her realms and Elizabeth II is the titular Queen of Canada.

A reader in Saturday Night wonders why there should be any quibbling on the subject and says no monetary lure can create a national fiymn or anthem; it has to come from the impulse of a patriotic heart.

So it has, and the recognition of an anthem's due place is a matter of gradual growth. At the moment Canada's patriotic heart is somewhat divided.

Meantime the "Queen." played for too indiscriminately anyway, might be reserved for occasions that bear on majesty; "O Canada" for more mundape moments.

But they should both always be played like the French army band plays national songs.

Reports From New York

WHAT Consul-General Ray Lawson is doing, with his plan for a privately financed Canada House in New York, is giving a new twist to the principle of co operative building Cooperative apartment houses in which each occi pant owns hi apartment, are fair ly new to Canada, a but they're common down here. In deed, Lawson lives

Generally speaking, in such projthe apartment block is divided by the number of apartment units to arrive at a value for a single apartment. Each prospective occupant then puts up a percentage of his apartment's value as working capital for the coop company. The co-op borrows the test of the capital, and after the building is completed the joint owners make monthly payments to retire the mortgage. Canada House New York Ltd., the company Lawson formed, is essentally a co-op. The 30 rich businessmen who've put up $100,000 each toprovide initial working capital for the $8,000,000 plus skyscraper are like the members of an apartment co-op, except that they're looking for nothing out of it personally. To them it's not an investment in living space nor, in most cases, even in office space for their companies. As Lawson puts it, their investment is in patriotism.

Lawson isn't ready to disclose the names of his patriotic money men. That must wait on all the legal T crossing and I dotting, but eventually they'll receive full public recognition. probably including their names on a bronze plaque in the foyer of the Canada House-to-be.

On the Record

With Justice For All

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

HE case of Midshipman Eugene William Landy will be an acid test of public sensibility. Mr. Landy, student of the U.S.

his class of 96, graduated with three special honors and an award from the Daughters of the American Revolution. He was entitled to a commission in the naval reserve which was denied to only two other classmates, in their cases because of physical disabilities.

Mr. Landy more than met all tests, physical, intellectual, and ethical. But on the eve of his graduation he was refused a commission for no official reasons whatsoever. Unofficially "naval spokesmen" justified the rejection because "Mr. Landy had extremely close association with his mother who has been a Communist."

Nobody in this case invoked the Fifth Amendment. Mr. Landy freely admitted that his mother had joined the party in 1944 while working for Russian relief, and his mother confirmed this. Both said that as the boy grew older (he was 10 in 1944) he begged her to leave the party, which she finally did.

If these are not the essential facts the Navy-Department, whose assistant secretary called the rejection "a considered action of the navy," must present to the public the entire navy version. If they are the basic facts those responsible for the "considered action" should apologize and or resign. For no trifling matter is involved, but the most fundamental principle of civilized justice, namely, that no person may be pun-Ished for the errors of others.

Compounding cruelty with stupidity young Landy standing with his class was not permitted to swear allegiance to his flag and country and a photograph showing the class standing with hands raised in salute to the flag while Landy's hung at his sides was distributed throughout the nation. Were patriotic American opinion that of the navy the damage to young Landy, officially unaccused, would be enormous. But Americans do believe that the oath to the flag represents a nation "with liberty and Justice for all." So the public indignation is directed not against Mr. Landy but against the navy whose brass 100K the unexplained "considered ac lion." The DAR, displaying some of the guts that distinguished their ancesfors, refused to withdraw their prize and congressional leaders have taken up the case, so Mr. Landy has reason to anticipate eventual justice, But suppose no one had done so: what would young Mr. Landy think and feel about American justice?

As far as we know in this "extremely close relation between mother and son," it was the son who, as he matured, wielded the stronger influence and against his mother's political affiliations. These began, remember, in 1944, at the climax of the war when it was generally considered disloyal not to trust our brave Communist allies. But suppose the boy had falled to convince his mother. Suppose she were still a Communist. What should he have done? Denounce her to the authorities?

hiere we approach the most delicate question of loyalty. In no court is a wife or husband, parent or child, required to testify against the other. The wisdom of the race recognizes the sanctity of family loyalties and the unnaturalness of family breaches. And of all such ties none is stronger than that of mother and son.

A person may change his political ideas. Most of us have done so in a lifetime. People have abandoned one country for another. But no one has more than one mother. The mother may be foolish, stupid, even evil, and the son may disapprove of her. But his disapproval like that of the mother of a wayward son, is a source of grief. The mother or son may feel he mifst compensate society by superior conduct. But the instinct of each to defend the other against outsiders is fundamental in nature. Being fundamental in nature it is funcamental to society. For the original social unit of society is the family, I would say that a son who is not loyal to his mother (deservedly or not; lacks the most primitive sense

Totalitarian states, usurping even such primitive loyalties, encourage children to spy on and denounce parents and parents children, holding each responsible for the errors of the other, and rewarding family disloyalty. This appalls the civilized mind. It is unnatural, perverted, and thus evil.

The Navy Department, apparently acting in similar manner, should not only reconsider its action but reconsider the considerations on which its action was based. In its obsession with anti-communism is it not leading along the same dark path?

The navy must not only defend the physical existence of America. It must defend the American ethics and tradition. If that fails there is nothing worthy to defend, meeting Tuesday that a seafront development should be the subject of a vote at the next municipal election.

The commissioners and planners heard William Mullett, who spoke for an unnamed syndicate which, he said, wanted to reclaim a portion of the seafront from the Kinsmen's children playground to Richmond Court, fronting on the highway. The land would be opened as a husiness secwith stores, supermarket, hotel and theatre,

Mr. Mullett said the syndicate was willing to post a performance bond.

The commissioners and town planners, however, felt the plan was too large and the implications too many for them to make a decision, and left it to the syndicate to inform the taxpayers of the merita of the proposal as it would affect the village.

The organization has been assured that the sole remaining wharfage area in Chemainus harbor is a reserved waterfront property and that its request will be considered before any lease is granted.

PORT ALBERNI - District 70 School Board considered the possibility of finding a use for an Iron gate at the old Gill school and voted against its sale.

A letter from Miss Olive E. the 10-foot gate for use on property. She stated that the fence where the gate is hanging by one blage was built by her father about 45 years ago.

Trustees considered that It would be advisable to hang on to the gate in case it were needed at some other site.

Nanaimo Polio Toll Mounts to Seven NANAIMO - Officials of Central Vancouver

Island health unit said Wednesday there had been seven known cases of polio in Nanaimo this season. Cases involved five children over six years of age and two young women. None of the patients had been treated with Salk vaccine.

Officials stressed there was no need for alarm but stated parents would be well advised to keep their children from swimming pools and crowds. It was important, they said, that children using the beaches should not be allowed to become chilled and should stay in the water only for short periods and get thoroughly dry and dressed immediately after being in for a short swim.

WOODWARD'S

INCONCLUSIVE: According to a study made in ocean feeding areas off the southwest coast of Vancouver Island in 1953 by D. J. Milne of the Pacific biological station at Nanaimo, the at about 15 fathoms-90 feet. And the best method of catching a coho is to use a spoon at a depth of five fathoms.

Four lures were used in the experiment-seven and five inch yellow and blue Rex Field plugs, a No. 2 brass Gibbs eggwobbler, and a seven-inch brass McMahon spoon. Four lures of each type were placed five fathoms apart on separate lines.

A total of 54 coho and 97 springs were caught during the test. Best depth for coho was five fathoms and the best for springs was 15 fathoms. In each case, the two spoons outfished the plugs by hig margins.

Most surprising was the fact that 20 coho were taken on the large spoon. Twenty-seven went for the egg-wobbier, only two were taken on the larger plug and five on the five-inch plug.

Thirty-live springs were taken on the larger spoon and 30 on the egg-wobbler, a popular lure with commercial fishermen. Twenty grabbed the larger plug and 12 were taken on the smaller one. However, it was proven again that the larger the lure, the larger the fish. While the large plug caught only 21 per cent of the spring salmon, it accounted for 36 per cent of the total weight.

All this makes interesting reading but proves little, and not only because the number of salmon caught wasn't large enough for any definite conclusions.

One can't help wondering what the ratio would have been had a Macs Squid or a Wee Louie been used as the small plug, or if the large spoon had been a Wonder and the small one a Tom Mack. Or what would have happened had the plugs been a different color combination and the spoons silver instead of brass. Or how herring strip or minnows would have fared against the artificials. Or what was the effect of trolling spoons and plugs at the same speed. Or would the same lures, depths and trolling speeds do better or worse in other areas. Don't we

SHORTAGE OF STRIP: One of the features of this year's angling has been the swing to the use of herring strip. Few anglers know how to cut and rig strip but the Strip-Teaser made the cutting unnecessary and the rigging so simple anyone can

Success of the Strip-Teaser, however, created a new, and somewhat unexpected, problem for manufacturer Rhys Davis, The unprecedented demand has created a shortage of strip and Davis, and others who are cutting herring for use in the Strip-Teaser and other similar lures, are finding it impossible to keep up with orders, piling up as the salmon season nears its Vancouver Island peak. Lutters are working overtime and Davis' Immediate goal is to take care of anglers in Sunday's ladder

WASHINGTON (Reuters) -The ensus bureau Wednesday estimated that in June this year about 32,000,000 or 67 per cent of all United States households counted, had one or more television sets. The last time such a survey was made, the bureau said, was in April 1950 when it found about 5,000,000 households had television sets, or 17 per cent of the total.

first hearings. A second stage of the same project, at the same damsite, will raise the lake level by another 45 feet, to elevation 725 feet, which is some 15 feet above normal high water and some five or six feet above extreme high water at

Buttle lake. Let me repeat that there is no possible objection to the first stage of the project. And there can be real advantage to the recreational value of the area, as well as to the hydro-electric resource. If the lake is raised to elevation 710 feet or even a little higher.

Much of this value will be lost if the water is raised high enough to drown the standing timber along Buttle laiss or to necessitate clear-

Exactly where such difficulties begin to arise no one knows, for the simple reason that no one has been ordered to find out. It may well be that timber and brush along the lake edge could stand temporary flooding to a little beyond elevation 710' - perhaps to within ten or twelve feet of the commission's proposed level.

This last few feet of water is not storage needed for the main, high head plant of the John Hart development. It simply reflects dead storage, aimed at producing a slightly higher seasonal head at the amall plant to be established below Upper Campbell lakea plant which the commission. engineers called "uneconomic at the original hearHMS Superb, seen here gaily dressed in bunting, which leaves at 9.30 a.m. today for Santa Barbara, Calif.
